*P3a. Description: (Describe resource and its major elements, include design, material, condition, alterations, size, setting, and boundaries)

Recently rehabilitated, this former barn has (originally) a stone foundation, side-gabled roof and double-hung windows. The building is clad in channel-rustic siding, and there is a new metal roof. The shallow eaves are boxed and feature boxed returns at the gable ends. Centered on the front facade (facing the rear of the original residence associated with this barn) is a raised gable, above the hay loft and carriage openings. The hay loft door, with its herringbone board design, is preserved, but has been encapsulated by a fixed picture window. City records indicate that the main barn door also featured a herringbone pattern; however, the opening is currently glazed with modern entry door. The windows have been replaced. The area surrounding the building is mostly paved for parking, and there is a basement entrance to the northeast side.

Historical Background

This warehouse was built by local merchant Sam Cloud. Cloud owned the Cloud-Smith store at the corner of Third Street and Big Basin Way, and this Hay and Feed Warehouse was originally on the same parcel as the Cloud-Smith Store. It is known that the warehouse was a storeroom for the farm and horse products. The loft held bales of hay, oats, etc., and the basement area served as a stable.

Integrity

The building retains some of its original architectural design, workmanship and materials; however, the windows and agricultural openings have been altered, and much of the setting has been changed over time, and only some of the historic associations and feelings are preserved in this former warehouse.
